Dolphy laid to rest amid cheers

PHILIPPINE DAILY INQUIRER

FINAL SCENE Dolphy's partner Zsa Zsa Padilla speaks to families, relatives and friends of the comedy king during Sunday's burial rites at Heritage Memorial Park in Taguig City.

By Marisol R. Cruz and Miko Morelos

WHEN ALL the tributes were said and the rituals done, Dolphy's grieving relatives and friends turned their tears into cheers, just as the "King of Comedy" would have wanted to be sent off.

Rodolfo "Dolphy" Vera Quizon was laid to rest yesterday afternoon at Heritage Memorial Park in Taguig City and got a hearty cheer from his family just before the tomb was shut.

"He would not want to see you crying," said Fr. Larry Faraon, who led the ceremony on Heritage Drive at 2 p.m. He asked those present to give the late comedian a rousing applause, and then led the shouting of "Hep hep! Hooray!" thrice and "Mabuhay si Dolphy!"

"Dolphy is now happy. He is with the Lord," Faraon said.

White doves were released, while funeral staff twisted several confinement tubes that launched confetti into the air as the glimmering casket, adorned with white petals, was placed inside the tomb.

Dolphy, 83, succumbed to complications arising from chronic obstructive pulmonary disorder on Tuesday. He would have turned 84 on July 25.

His gold-plated casket, which the comedian purchased way back in 1977, was brought to its niche by pallbearers, including Manila Mayor Alfredo Lim, whose city bestowed upon the comedian the honor of being one of the capital's outstanding citizens last month. The coffin

Gov't won't protest warship's incursion

By Christine O. Avendaño

THE GOVERNMENT will not protest what could have been an accidental incursion of a Chinese warship into Philippine territory last week, but it will investigate how it happened.

The People's Liberation Army's Missile Frigate No. 560 ran aground on Hasa-Hasa Shoal (international name: Half Moon Shoal) in the West Philippine Sea (South China Sea), 111 kilometers west of Palawan, on Wednesday night.

A Chinese salvage party refloated the 103.2-meter, 1,425-ton, Jianghu-class frigate early yesterday and the vessel headed back home, with light damage but with none of its crew injured.

Philippine Navy and Coast Guard rescue vessels had been standing by in the area, waiting for a call for assistance from the Chinese rescue party.

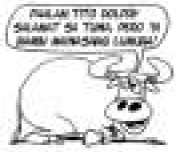

International maritime laws require the Philippines to come to the aid of the stranded warship, and the government authorized assistance.

The Chinese Embassy in Manila said the rescue party extricated the frigate from the shoal at around 5 a.m. yesterday.

Citing a report from the Chinese defense ministry, embassy spokesperson Zhang Hua said the frigate's stern suffered light damage, but "all personnel aboard are safe." He said preparations for the frigate's return trip to its motherland "were

FOR A FEW hours, Heritage Park was turned into a comedy bar.

On the last night of the wake of comedy king Dolphy, the Quizon family decided to ask various comedians to provide comic relief, said talent manager Malou Ferrer, a friend of the family.

"His children wanted to continue Tito Dolphy's legacy of fun and laughter and end it in a light mood because the last three days have been crying sessions," Ferrer said.

China open to talks with Asean on code

By Jerry E. Esplanada

CHINA is open to holding talks with Southeast Asian nations on a code of conduct in the West Philippine Sea (South China Sea).

Returning from failed Southeast Asia talks in Phnom Penh, Chinese Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi on Friday said discussions on the code of conduct should be made "on the basis of full compliance with the Declaration of the Conduct of Parties in the South China Sea (DOC) by all parties."

Yang's statement came after this year's meeting of the 10-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) ended in disarray over how to deal with China on territorial disputes in the West Philippine Sea.

China opposes efforts to bring the disputes into any international arena for discussions, arguing that the conflicts should be tackled only between Beijing and each of the rival claimants.

ANALYSIS

A CHINESE salvage fleet of at least five vessels and several smaller boats steamed last week into a shoal off Palawan Island to rescue a People's Liberation Army warship that ran aground on a reef while patrolling disputed waters in the Spratly archipelago in the West Philippine Sea (South China Sea).

The expedition at one point threatened to trigger a new showdown between the Philippines and China and push the intensity of their territorial dispute to a higher notch since the start of a standoff of their vessels in April.

The Philippine Air Force (PAF) entered the fray on Saturday by flying surveillance planes over the Spratlys and

LP, UNA super coalition proposed

By Gil C. Cabacungan

WITH NO real opposition coming forward to challenge his administration in the 2013 midterm elections, should President Aquino assemble a senatorial ticket that shall run unopposed?

San Juan City Rep. Joseph Victor "JV" Ejercito raised this possibility, explaining that forming a "super senatorial slate" between the Liberal Party coalition and the United Nationalist Alliance (UNA) would be the best scenario for Mr. Aquino, who has maintained his popularity two years after assuming office.

"It will be ideal since there is no clear-cut line between the opposition and the administration unlike during Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's time in 2007," said Ejercito, son of former President Joseph Estrada who formed UNA with Vice President Jejomar Binay.

Taiwan needs Pinoys to man fishing fleets

TAIWAN'S fishing industry is short 5,000 fishermen and labor recruiters are asking the Philippines for help in filling the need.

The Filipino Manpower Agencies Accredited in Taiwan (Filman) said there were many Filipino fishermen who wanted to apply, but they could not afford the training and other requirements for deployment.

"The Philippines has traditionally supplied fishermen to Taiwan. However, many of our fishermen lack the financial resources to comply with the requirements like passports, seaman's book, medical fees and, most importantly, the Safety of Life at Sea (Solas) certificate which is required under an international maritime safety treaty," Filman president Jackson Gay said in a statement.

Solas certification involves an obligatory training program lasting up to 10 days and costing up to P6,000 in private maritime training schools. The Solas is required before a sea-based Filipino worker can be issued a seaman's book by the Maritime Industry Authority.

Gay suggested the Technical Education and Skills Development Authority (Tesda) subsidize or come up with a cheaper Solas program.

A fisherman in Taiwan earns about US$400 (P17,000) a month.

"If the country wants jobs generation, Tesda should come up with a subsidy program for Solas training that will enable Filipino fishermen to take advantage of the serious lack of manpower resources in the fishing fleets," he said. —Jerome Aning

8-yr-old murder case nears end

AFTER eight years and eight judges, the killing of mayoral candidate [illegible] Basal in Tampakan, South Cotabato, in 2004 will finally see resolution.

Manila Regional Trial Court Branch 4 is set to hand down today the verdict in the murder case filed against Bienvenido Barreras, former mayor of Tampakan and principal suspect in Basal's killing.

Presiding Judge James Rodriguez scheduled the promulgation for 8:30 a.m. Rodriguez is the eighth judge to try the case after earlier judges inhibited themselves.

The murder case, which received much attention in Mindanao, was transferred to Manila by the Supreme Court.

Basal was slain in broad daylight on July 28, 2004, in his jeep parked on [illegible] Street. Three men on a motorcycle shot him several times, killing him instantly.

Basal ran for Tampakan mayor under the Lakas-CMD in the May 2004 elections but lost to Mayor [illegible] Barreras, the accused's father.

The confessed gunman, who turned state's evidence, positively identified Bienvenido and Henry Barreras as the masterminds of the killing.

Police arrested Bienvenido Barreras at the town hall days after he assumed office as mayor. He is detained at the Manila City Jail.

Henry, Bienvenido's uncle, remains at large despite efforts to find him. Other suspects identified by the gunman as members of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front under the late commander [illegible] remain free.

THE SUICIDE rate among Filipinos has gone up in the last 21 years with the majority of cases involving young people aged 24 years old and below, according to studies.

They also showed that in most instances, the person who committed suicide did so during summer or in the morning when all family members had gone off to work or school, leaving the house empty.

Museo de Baler features Philippines' rich Hispanic heritage

By Ramon H. Royandoyan
Contributor

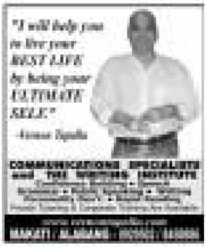

BALER, AURORA, does not only attract tourists because of surfing sites, of which it has aplenty due to its proximity to Pacific Ocean, but also because of its rich history.

By local accounts, Museo de Baler houses several historical artifacts that link it closely to the Philippines' first and longest colonizer, Spain.

Inaugurated in 2001, the museum's historical mural, a relief unit that covers the façade, was created by sculptor Toym Imao, son of National Artist for the Visual Arts Abdulmari Imao. The work was commissioned by Sen. Edgardo Angara and the Baler Historical Committee.

Benito Medina, Baler's local historian, said the museum was put up partly to commemorate the Philippine-Spanish Friendship Day and relive the Siege of Baler.

"The museum contains pieces that are significant to the town's history," said Medina.

Among the pieces are Chinese porcelain items from the Galleon Trade recovered from shipwrecks in Manila Bay, Luzon and Palawan.

President Manuel Quezon, who was born in Baler, has a statue in the center of the park named in his honor. Even his restored presidential car is showcased among the museum's many artifacts.

Franciscan memorabilia

Aside from the earthenware, the museum also houses old letters, reports and drawings from the Franciscan missionaries who settled in the Aurora region from 1609 to 1899. The Franciscan memorabilia are showcased in "Seraphica," an exhibit mounted by Carlos Madrid. Madrid's dissertation is the exhibit itself.

The exhibit features a Franciscan breviary; a book of Latin liturgical rites of the Catholic Church; a registry of the Aeta population; academic records; a vibrator and tabernacle used by the Franciscans.

The items were used for the celebration of the Mass in Baler's church, whose patron is San Luis Obispo de Tolosa. Fr. Blas Palomino ordered the construction of the church in 1871.

The second floor of Museo de Baler contains newly installed pieces of visual art, called "Portraits of Fortitude." Local artist Sherwin Paul Gonzales painted portraits of the survivors and participants of the Siege of Baler. The oil-on-canvas pieces capture the emotions and expressions of the survivors during the standoff of Spaniards and Filipinos.

'Meridian,' 'Cineastas' exhibits

"Meridian World," a photo-and-poetry exhibit from four crew members—Maria Fernandez Portillo, Gabriel Dumecq Conrad, Mauricio Hidalgo and Miguel Tabique Zaera—of the 17th-century replica of the Spanish galleon Andalucia, which docked in the Philippines in October 2010.

The 27 photos, in black-and-white and printed on canvas, chronicled the journey of the galleon from Spain to China and the Philippines.

Accompanying the photos, which were shot onboard, are poems from Portillo, the ship's poet.

"The pictures were meant to be in black and white to unify the theme," said Antonio Torres, curator of "Meridian World."

Portillo added that while aboard the galleon, she felt as though "time stopped" whenever she wrote while sailing.

The poems, whose theme reflects life on the high seas, are all written in Spanish, with English translations beside them.

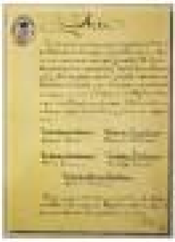

Instituto Cervantes also opened its coming exhibit, "44 Cineastas Filipinos," in the museum. The exhibit consists of photographs by the Spanish photographer Oscar Fernandez Orengo of top Filipino filmmakers, some of whom have made a name for themselves in the international film festival circuit, such as Cannes Best Director Brillante Mendoza and Venice film festival winner Lav Diaz.

Exhibit and cultural night close decade celebration of Philippine-Spanish Friendship Day

FIREWORKS CAPPED Philippine-Spanish Friendship Day last June 30, the national celebration of which took place in Baler, Aurora.

The event was doubly significant since the 10th anniversary of the celebration came along with the bicentennial commemoration of the Spanish Constitution of 1812.

The Cadiz Constitution of 1812 was Spain's first constitution. It "recognized" Philippine representation in the Cortes, the secularization of Philippine parishes, Filipino political rights. It declared the Philippines as a province of Spain.

"The Cadiz Constitution served as the basis of early governments and constitutional liberalism in early history," said retired Chief Justice Reynato Panganiban during the inaugural program in the morning.

Francisco de los Cobos, justice of the Spanish Constitutional Court, traced the history of the Malolos Constitution of 1899, the charter of the first Philippine Republic, to the Cadiz Constitution.

De los Cobos praised the Malolos charter for "consecrating human rights" just like Cadiz had done earlier.

Republic Act No. 9187, authored by Sen. Edgardo Angara, recognizes June 30 of every year as the Philippine-Spanish Friendship Day. It commemorates the act of benevolence of President Emilio Aguinaldo when he issued a decree on June 30, 1899, stating that the 35 soldiers who survived the legendary Siege of Baler be treated as comrades in arms, not prisoners of war.

At the close of the war of independence in 1898, 54 Spaniards—49 soldiers, three officers, one medical officer and a parish priest—barricaded themselves inside the Church of San Luis Obispo de Tolosa in Baler, Aurora.

They holed up in the church, refusing to surrender until June 2, 1899, or after 337 days.

During the yearlong siege, Filipino troops allowed combatants (under bonfires) to stray into the church grounds, providing food for the Spanish soldiers.

When the dust settled, 35 managed to survive. Five died from gunshot wounds, while 14 died from beriberi and dysentery. When the surviving Spaniards emerged from the church, they received cheers of "Amigos, amigos!" from the Katipuneros and natives of Baler.

Cultural night

The cultural night by the Cultural Center of the Philippines at Sentro Baler featured local and international performers.

Maria Fernandez Portillo, poet and Spanish philologist, did a poetry reading of "Puesto Inmutable" (Hidden Post). The poem is one of the many featured in the exhibit "Meridian World," which chronicles her journey in Galeon Andalucia, being stored in Museo de Baler, Sentro.

Spanish guitarist Javier Alvarez serenaded the audience with "La Edad del Porvenir" and "Sunset Boulevard."

Filipino soprano Camille Lopez-Molina sang Nonoy Maldonado's "Birdsong Marikit," while internationally renowned baritone Andrew Fernando gave a rousing rendition of Spanish animated films at Instituto Cervantes

INSTITUTO Cervantes, the cultural arm of the Spanish Embassy, is showing a film cycle of Spanish animated feature films this month. It opened with the screening of "Chico y Rita," nominated for Best Animated Feature at the 84th Academy Awards.

Spanish graphic novelist Miguelanxo Prado turns to animation with "De Profundis," a deceptively simple and lyrical tale of love about loneliness, passion and fate. With screening on July 21, it explores deep ocean life, its beauty and mystery.

Showing on July 28 is Adrian Garcia and Victor Maldonado's "Nocturna." Set in an orphanage and centered on young Tim, it begins with that universal child's phenomenon, the fear of the dark. Afraid of the dark but enamored of the stars, Tim finds himself exploring the world of the night with his new friend, the cat Shepard.

The films, in Spanish with English subtitles, will screen on the last two Saturdays of the month, 2 p.m., at Instituto Cervantes' Salon de Actos.

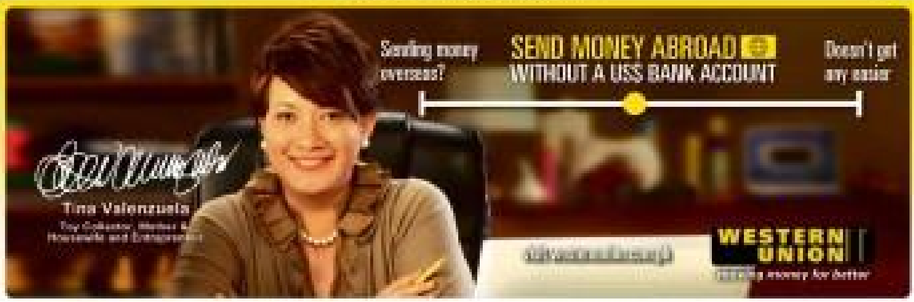

Admission to the screenings is free on a first-come, first-served basis.

Call tel. 5261482 or visit http://manila.cervantes.es.

Instituto Cervantes de Manila is at 855 T.M. Kalaw St., Ermita, Manila.

SEN. JUAN PONCE ENRILE

Captain of the Senate

MY DREAM INTERVIEW CONTEST

By Team Colegio San Agustin
Joseph Rem de la Cruz
Katherine Anne M. Farino
Justin B. Gutierrez
Riane Mitzi B. Manuel
Roberto C. Libao (coach)

I am the Master of my Fate. I am the Captain of my Soul.

SENATE President Juan Ponce Enrile quoted this line from the poem "Invictus" by William Ernest Henley when asked about his favorite pieces of literature.

He is, after all, a man who has taken charge of his own life. The son of a rich Manileño and a poor Bicana, he has been at multiple crossroads in his life.

Everything is vivid in his memory—his childhood spent in poverty, working as a teenager, fighting during World War II and his struggles in his career.

Being teens and amateurs in the art of interviewing, we were nervous weeks in the office of the Senate President. The warm reception of his staff was reassuring. They were all smiles as they offered us drinks. We thought we had a clear idea of the man we were going to interview. We thought that after 30 minutes, the interview would be through, we would refresh our story then move on with our lives.

We asked the Senate president if he needed a copy of our questions because we did not want him to be caught off guard. He declined the offer. "Candidly, truthfully, entirely in the best way I can and in the best way I know, I will answer your questions."

Childhood by the water

JPE was born in Gonzaga, Cagayan, to a fisherman's daughter. But his father was not from the province. "My classmates would point to me and say, 'That bastardo is a bastard!'" He learned from his mother that his father, Alfonso Ponce Enrile, was a powerful politician in Manila. Instead of his biological father, he grew up with a stepfather and two older siblings.

Since the family lived near the shore, their occupation was fishing. "My mother's livelihood was selling fish.... She would carry our catch on a shallow basket we called bilao. She would put the dripping basket, fish smell and all, on her head."

He was an adept fisherman and a long distance swimmer. "I was a diver, which is why my lungs are big...," he said. "And you could throw me into the water some 2 kilometers from shore and I would swim back to land."

Education is a good anchor

Manong Johnny had a colorful education. His favorite subject was history. Mathematics was easy for him because he was good at mental calculations.

"From Grade 1 to first year college, I would go to school barefoot because my mother could not afford to buy me slippers," he recalled, with a catch in his voice. His words faltered and then tears welled in his eyes. As he dried his eyes with a handkerchief, we realized that Juan Ponce Enrile, just like everyone else, was only human.

Poverty affected his education. He stopped schooling for a year after Grade 2. To be able to finish grade school, he worked as a houseboy for his uncle, who was a teacher.

"I cleaned the house, cooked, did the laundry, mopped the floor, fetched water and chopped firewood. That's why I know how to do all those chores," he said.

His education would later be sponsored by then-Mayor Crisanto Bruske until he got a scholarship at the Cagayan Valley Institute.

On his second year at the institute, in July 1941, he was suspected of

Please don't feed these animals

Text by Erika Sauler Photos by Johann Bosch

CHILDREN eagerly raised their hands as host Susie Abrera asked, "What insect spits at food they find on?"

The girl she chose answered promptly, "Housefly."

The next question was, "What animal uses jet propulsion to propel itself at sea?"

"Giant squid!" another child correctly answered.

How did these kids get to know these animal trivia? By visiting The Robot Zoo.

Engineered

The Science Discovery Center launched recently this international exhibit of robotic animatronics illustrating how nature has engineered their real counterparts.

In this zoo, the bat's ears are represented in sonar receptors, the chameleon's sticky tongue is a flypaper, the grasshopper's legs are piston rakes, their brains, mini computers.

New animals with fascinating body functions are the stars of this traveling exhibit developed by Texas-based Evergreen Exhibitions.

A GIRAFFE whose head and neck measure 9 feet tall greets visitors at the entrance to The Robot Zoo. At right is the giant squid with 18-ft-long tentacles.

THE ROBOTIC grasshopper has massive springs that mimic the muscles that power the real insect's jump.

VISITORS use their hands to press switches that light up, testing their reaction time. A housefly reacts 12 times faster than a human.

Safe animals

How does The Robot Zoo experience differ from a real zoo with live animals? "The zoo, no animals were harmed here," replied Carballo.

"Of late there has been controversy over the capability and confinement of live animals, brought about by the controversy of Mali, the 38-year-old lone elephant at Manila Zoo. Animal rights groups have called for the elephant's transfer to a sanctuary in the United States.

"I have nothing against zoos. I'm sure most of the animal zoos have experts and veterinarians to take care of the animals. But here, of course, all we need is electricity and we can still learn the science behind them not really," said Carballo.

Interactive

The Robot Zoo, based on a book of the same title by Marshall Editions in London, also has a dozen interactive activity stations where kids, and kids at heart, can play.

The walls of the 1,000-square meter walk-in gallery are decorated with colorful animals, trees and vines. For instance, visitors learn that, aside from being the second largest land animal next to elephants, the rhinoceros in Africa is a close relative of zebras, although it may not look it.

At the hands-on station, adults and children took turns creating their own pictograms at Motor Paradigm, flipping like hamsters, using their hands as flaps. There are catching insects with Bugger Gun, among other activities.

On tour

The Robot Zoo has toured science and natural history museums in Europe and North America. Brought here by Nido Fortified Science Discovery Center (NFSDC), it will be on show for eight months at the NFSDC exhibit hall in SM Mall of Asia in Pasay City.

NFSDC resident visiting world class exhibits and high-end equipment here, according to senior vice president Jennie Carballo, "so Filipinos won't have to go abroad. You can just go to the mall. Together with our sponsors, we are able to make it affordable."

Ron Pebble, Nido ... country manager for the Philippines, said they were glad to work with NFSDC on an exhibit that was both fun and educational.

THE ROBOT Body Shop allows visitors to tinker with the mechanical devices used to construct the robotic animals.

Fees and discounts

Entrance to The Robot Zoo is P200 per person for walk-in visitors. For P300, a visitor can have access to both The Robot Zoo and the Science Discovery Center. Groups going on field trips can contact a tour operator to get discounts.

To Greater Heights

Filipino parents have always believed that quality education is the best they could give their children. Believing in the same principle, Dr. Alan Valdez enrolled her daughter, Maria Patricia Valdez, in Kumon. "When we decided to start our medical practice here in Laguna, one of our concerns was how to give the best education to our children. So Kumon was an answer to that need," she recalled.

Ranking first in her Grade 2 class then, Patricia still needed to improve her speed and ability in answering math problems. "As a reward for having topped her class, her being a Kumon student was a gift for her. Once she was a Kumon student, she liked it so much," shared Dr. Valdez. Kumon then started to be part of her growing years – going to the Kumon Center was an addition to her daily routine and her Kumon worksheets became part of her daily homework.

Currently studying biology as a junior student at the University of the Philippines in Los Baños, the graduate Kumon student gave Patricia a character she champion Dr. Valdez has observed that Patricia has grown more diligent, more focused, and more determined. "She has developed the ability to set goals and the ability to achieve what she has set for herself. In whatever she does, I don't find her taking it easy. There's no easy thing for her whether it's her major subjects or extra-curricular work. She gives her full effort," said Dr. Valdez. As she went through her Kumon worksheets and her academic tasks, she has developed the discipline to work hard to accomplish her goals and the belief that she can achieve those goals.

As Kumon strengthened Patricia's academic skills and developed her character, Kumon helped her further realize her capabilities and achieve greater heights. Seeing both of her parents as her role models, Patricia also dreams of becoming a medical doctor like them.

With Patricia's educational journey so far, what can be gained from Kumon? "My biggest lesson that you can learn from Kumon is that nothing comes at an instant. Success doesn't come at an instant and hard work is a primary factor. We have to realize that Kumon is a whole program. Without... we have to be focused on that goal to finish. As a parent, I learned that you have to be encouraging and to be more patient especially on those days when she gets tired. Knowing that we have to encourage and motivate her to sustain [herself] on that ultimate goal which is to finish the program," Dr. Valdez shared.
